Dear Central Wasatch Commission Board:

It has been my honor and privilege to serve as the Deputy Director at the Central Wasatch Commission. It is with mixed emotions that I now am writing to inform you that I am resigning from my position. My last day of employment with the Central Wasatch Commission will be June 3rd, 2019.

I will be moving on to work for a real estate development company headquartered in downtown Salt Lake City. The company specializes in adaptive reuse and thoughtful placemaking in urban environments across the country.

The outlined vision and work ahead of this body are of the utmost importance to our community. I feel lucky to have played a small part in assisting the Central Wasatch Commission in its foundational work to implement decades of planning in the Central Wasatch mountains. The transportation, recreation, economic development and sustainability initiatives underway will preserve the legacy of a place that is near and dear to my heart.

What is most difficult about leaving the Central Wasatch Commission is walking away from the team of dedicated, creative and hard-working people I am lucky to call colleagues and friends. The Central Wasatch Commission board, staff, and jurisdictional support teams work tirelessly to support the commission's mission and advance a consensus-based agenda.

I am working in consultation with the Central Wasatch Commission Chair and Executive Director to develop a transition plan that ensures stability for the Commission's ongoing responsibilities and duties.

Thank you for the opportunity to have served in support of the important work to protect and preserve the Central Wasatch. I have truly enjoyed the privilege and responsibility of public service.

Sincerely,

Jesse Dean
Deputy Director, Central Wasatch Commission
